

Paper for the FAC on 17th November 2020

This paper and the supporting documentation was discussed by Chapter at its meeting on the 5th November 2020 and is being presented to the FAC at its meeting on the 17th November 2020

Purpose of the Paper:

1. To provide the required documentation in respect of an application from the Reiss–Engelhorn Museum in Mannheim, Germany for the loan of up to three folios of MS 3500 (Exon Domesday) to be exhibited as part of the prestigious exhibition ‘The Normans: A story of Mobility, Conquest and Innovation’, 18th September 2022 – 26th February 2023.

Application for the loan of up to three folios in support of ‘The Normans: A story of Mobility, Conquest and Innovation’ Exhibition.

1. Introduction

In July 2020 the Library and Archives received a formal request for the loan of up to three folios from Exon Domesday to the Reiss–Engelhorn Museum in Mannheim [REM].

- The formal application for the loan, including the Museum’s motivation for the loan and ‘Information for Lenders’ detailing key factors that the Museum would provide for items on loan. [Appendix 1].
- Facilities Report – Special exhibition area. This follows the Standard Facility Report of the Registrars Committee of the American Association of Museums, and includes a list of the organisations that the REM has borrowed from. This is compatible with the equivalent British standards. [Appendix 2].
- Signed Loan Agreement [Appendix 3].

2. Items Requested

MS 3500 (Exon Domesday) folio 29r and/or folio 95r. and/or folio 175.

3. REM's Statement of Motivation for the Request

Extract from the Request of Loan document:

"The greatest action of William the Conqueror, the first Norman King of England, (or the one most keenly felt), was the Great Survey ordered by him in 1085, which prompted the creation of the so-called Domesday Book. However the Domesday Book was not the only source and result of the inquest commissioned by William. Some would argue that even more interesting are the so-called Domesday satellites, that is the surviving preparation documents containing the raw data for the inquest. While most of these 'satellites' are preserved only in later copies, the Liber Exoniensis or "Exon Domesday" has survived as a precious original, which reveals some interesting details about the collecting and processing of information. The name "Liber Exoniensis" is a bit misleading, because it was not written as a book, but is rather a collection of 103 libelli (which are brief documents written on individual folio's of parchment) later bound in a single volume. A team of different scribes worked on the collection, probably in the royal scriptorium at Winchester recording information provided by the returns of the survey-commissioners. It is reasonable to suppose that there were thousands of similar documents for all territories included in the records known as "the king's book". Unfortunately most of them have perished or been destroyed and it is a real stroke of luck, that the Exeter booklets containing entries for Somerset, Devon, Cornwall and partially of Dorset and Wiltshire have been deemed important enough to be preserved.

These records bear witness to the actual working of the collecting and recording activities which involved many people and took much effort, which is not that evident just looking at Great and Little Domesday, which were more uniformly worked and structured. In many respects, Exon Domesday appears as an unedited version of the respective entries in Great Domesday which cut out much information about tax records, people, livestock and land. Moreover the documentation gives some insight into grievances and disputes related to the changes between 1066 and 1086 as well as to the treatment meted out to the English people by their Norman conquerors and overlords.

One Chapter of the Exhibition will focus completely on the events that led to the Conquest of England and the strategies employed by William to secure his new dominion. In this context, the great survey, its realisation and its documentation are of the greatest importance. The Domesday book and even more so the more detailed circuit working papers, most of all Exon Domesday – the only one surviving as an original bear witness to some of the most revolutionary events in English history, events that led to great changes in its society and altered the course of its destiny. It is therefore crucial to be able to illustrate these aspects by displaying at least one of the folios of Exon Domesday, despite knowing their extraordinary value and fragility (ideally that containing fol. 29r: Queen Mathilda's lands in Dorset). In our exhibition we try to highlight some female figures beside the dominating male ones – and/or fol. 175r with its reference to Bishop Walkelin of Winchester and the hearing of Salisbury and/or fol. 95r which tells the story of the collected information recorded by different scribes relaying information about disputes and due payments. Without any doubt it would be the highlight of the entire chapter, if not the entire exhibition. Moreover it might help introduce our visitors to an aspect of Norman history which is without doubt very well known in England, but much less in other parts of Europe."

4. Library & Archives' Consultation

The Library & Archives initially treated the loan request with a mixture of excitement and caution. This is the first time in several decades that a serious loan request has been received from a non-UK institution. The team were not familiar with the REM. In order to assess the request, approaches were made to contacts with expertise in the field:

Julia Crick (Professor of Palaeography and Manuscript Studies at King's College London and Lead Investigator for the 'Conqueror's Commissioners: The Domesday Survey of the South West' Project, October 2014–September 2018)

Prof. Crick and Dr Stephen Baxter of The Conqueror's Commissioners project on Exon Domesday were aware of the proposed exhibition. Prof. Crick confirmed that Dr Baxter is to speak at a conference on the 15th 16th October 2020 'in preparation for the international historic cultural exhibition. The involvement of Dr Baxter and the Exon Domesday research team in this project are considered sound evidence of the credentials of the REM and that the Exhibition is worthy of support. Prof. Crick considers that it would be excellent publicity for the manuscript and the Cathedral. She observed that the correspondents had made good use of the Exon Domesday website [<https://www.exondomesday.ac.uk/>] in their research.

Claire Breay (Head of Ancient Medieval Manuscripts at the British Library)

The British Library will be loaning six manuscripts to the Normans exhibition. The British Library does not have concerns about loaning items to the REM, and German museums are controlled by very high standards regarding security, conservation and environmental conditions. Claire has introduced us to a member of the British Library staff as a mentor and guide on loaning the manuscript to REM.

Financial Support

We are very aware of the financial needs of the Cathedral and the Library and Archives. It is not usual for Museums to offer a financial incentive towards a loan however following discussions with the Dean a case has been made to the Exhibitions Project Manager to ascertain if any money would be available. She has proved open to the request and we anticipate she is waiting to hear whether the loan will be permitted before discussing the matter further.

Permissions required

This application will have to go to the Dean and Chapter, Exeter Cathedral Fabric Advisory Committee and it is possible that the Cathedrals Fabric Commission England will call it in due to the value and uniqueness of the document and that it is going out of the Country.

Note: All the above will be dependent on the Coronavirus restrictions in place at the time.

Recommendation

This is a serious, legitimate, and reasonable proposal from a reputable institution with a demonstrable track record, for the inclusion of part of the Exon Domesday manuscript in a prestigious exhibition, at least on a par with the recent Anglo Saxon Kingdoms exhibition at the British Library to which the Cathedral loaned three manuscripts (the Exeter Book, folios from the Exon Domesday and the Golden Charter). There is already an online Exon Domesday web resource which can be used both before and during The Normans exhibition to raise awareness of this extremely important manuscript and enable people from all over Europe to understand our shared history better. It offers the Cathedral and its collections recognition in Europe, and it places Exon Domesday at the centre of an important period in history. It will also offer us valuable experience in loaning items outside the UK.

Having made enquires with appropriate experts, and read in detail the information provided from REM, the Library & Archives would like to recommend that the loan request be approved.

Tuesday, the 30th of June, 2020

Dear Mrs Barwood

From September 2022, the Reiss-Engelhorn-Museums, Mannheim, will dedicate a major exhibition to the fascinating subject of the Normans. For the first time in German-speaking countries and for the first time in such an extensive and complete manner, the exhibition will present the Norman rise to power and will bring to light aspects of a history of medieval migration and integration that can inspire us in the present day.

The exhibition thus aims to contribute to the creation of a European identity and emphasise the importance of transregional and transnational development, which has been crucial in the formation of a dynamic cultural identity open to dialogue and has persistently influenced and shaped the history of Europe.

The contemporary world and the current political situation are strongly characterised by conflicts, economic imbalances and migratory movements that influence global social structures, especially that of Europe, and modify them in a lasting way. Themes concerning integration and migration have therefore recently gained an importance that was unforeseeable only a few years ago.

Despite the distinctiveness of the present political and social environment, the fundamental mechanisms and processes of extensive and intercultural migratory movements, as well as the way in which one relates to them, are not new. Indeed, throughout the course of history it is possible to observe numerous similar occurrences. Exemplary is the Carolingian period, in which the cultural area was formed that could that could loosely be defined as 'Europe', as well as the Anglo-Saxon period in England, which was marked and profoundly influenced by migration and conquest.

By the end of the ninth century, the impetus for this process was coming from a group outside this cultural area. They were the "men from the North" or, as they subsequently became known in some parts of Europe, the "Normans" – a name which should not be taken to mean a unified group. These people long-lasting transformed and influenced the face of Europe. Their story unites Northern Europe with Italy and the entire Mediterranean area and Western Europe to Eastern Europe as far as the Black Sea.

Wherever they reached, the Normans, along with the use of military force, always focussed on integrating into the pre-existing structures, upon which they then imposed their own mark. They cleverly knew to make use of cultural techniques to safeguard their power and to further increase it. The success of this strategy soon bore fruit and permitted the Normans in the space of a few generations to integrate almost entirely into the indigenous population and in a short time they were no longer perceived as foreign sovereigns or even as invaders.

The international approach of the exhibition is also reflected in the scientific development of the exhibition project. Due to its direction and subject, a European perspective and the involvement of the locations central to the Norman sphere of activity – Eastern Europe, France, England, Italy and the Mediterranean – are indispensable. The Reiss-Engelhorn Museums, together with the Department of History at the University of Heidelberg and the combined Research Centre for History and Cultural Heritage, are closely aligned with an international network of researchers who will support them in the scientific development of this subject and with whom a conference connected to the project will be organised.

Moreover, two partners in Normandy – the Réunion des Musées Métropolitains Rouen and the Musée de Normandie in Caen – have joined the overall project and an adapted version of the exhibition will be presented in Rouen in 2023 while, at the same time, Caen will dedicate a co-project to the reception of the Normans.

During the exhibition there will be presented the findings of the most recent research and emphasised the vast network of social, political, cultural and economic connections that already existed in the Middle Ages. Furthermore, the exhibition will explain the often surprising contemporary relevance of certain topics and offer insights not only for the understanding of the past but also for the confrontation of questions that are today of great significance.

In agreement with our scientific coordinators we therefore extend to you a request for the loan of one of the most important treasures from the Exeter Cathedral Library which would be of fundamental value to our exhibition. We would be immensely grateful if you were to support our project with the loan of the object attached to this letter.

Lastly, for the preparation and publication of the exhibition as well as for all publications related to it and the voluminous exhibition catalogue, we would have need of photographic reproductions of all the pieces in the exposition. Accordingly, we ask that you make available to the rem gGmbH appropriate reproductions (colour photographs in digital format, at least 300 dpi on an A4 sheet) and to grant us their right of use for all printed material and online communications relating to the exhibition.

We remain entirely at your disposal for further information or clarification.

Yours sincerely

England, 1086

One of the most famous written documents of English history is intimately connected to the Normans, and in particular to one of their most famous leaders: William the Conqueror, the first Norman King of England.

When he, as Duke of Normandy, conquered England in 1066 he won a prize that was much sought after at the time, despite not being the only contender for the English crown.

Born illegitimately as William "the Bastard" circa 1027 to the Duke of Normandy, Robert I (1027-1035), he became duke in 1035 when his father died at Nicaea during a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. Too young to reign independently, William had to face years of struggle over power and even his life before squashing the rebellion and establishing his authority over Normandy. Over the years, he met with challenges from various nobles and members of his own family, but in the end succeeded in consolidating his control over the dukedom. In the 1050s, he married – despite papal prohibition – Matilda of Flanders, daughter of the powerful Count of Flanders. His bride, through her dowry and her connections provided him with important allies and the means for further campaigns. Gradually William expanded his sphere of influence, securing control of neighbouring regions and thus expanding his territory. During this time, the Duke became also a contender for the English throne, held by a king who was his kin and expected to die childless: Edward the Confessor (1042-1066). Edward was the son of the first Norman Queen of England, Emma (d. 1016), who had been William's great-aunt. Based on this connection and on a promise reportedly made to him by the king, William staked his claim for the crown when Edward died in January 1066. There were, however, other claimants and one of these, Harold Godwinson, succeeded as the new king. William decided to act and claimed that Harold had sworn him allegiance and promised to support his claim to the English throne. During spring and summer, the Duke collected troops and built a fleet. He crossed the Channel on the night of 27/28 September whilst Harold was marching northwards to confront another contender to the throne: Harald Hardrada, the King of Norway. Harold was victorious at Stamford Bridge and Harald died in the battle, but the campaign took its toll on his army and when Harold confronted William at the Battle of Hastings, it spelled disaster. Harold was defeated and killed on the battlefield (14th October) and the victorious Duke marched toward the capital where he was crowned king at Westminster Abbey on Christmas Day 1066.

While the actual conquest was swift, the assertion of power was not. For most of his reign, William had to deal with rebellions and the shifting alliances of his various enemies. Amongst these, he numbered not only many conquered and subsequently dispossessed Anglo-Saxon nobles, but also the King of France, members of the French nobility and the Danes. The king responded to these threats with peremptoriness and ruthlessness, travelling back and forth between his territories.

Initially, William followed the local traditions regarding the administrative system (such as coinage, usage of writs, regional organization (shires etc.)), which was more complex than that in Normandy, but during the 1070s he wrought great changes in the social structure of his kingdom. Normans loyal to William now occupied nearly all positions of great power, and intermarriages between Norman and Anglo-Saxon families were encouraged. The English Church was similarly affected and a number of bishops and abbots were removed and replaced by Normans (according to the Anglo-Saxon Chronicler for example, Lanfranc, the Abbot of Caen, came to England to become Archbishop of Canterbury).

The greatest action of the King, or at least the one most keenly felt, was however the Great Survey ordered by William in 1085 which prompted the creation of the so-called Domesday Book. This name was not given to it at the time but used from the twelfth century onwards because the information recorded in the book was considered irreversible (That is why we have called the book 'the Book of Judgement' [...] because its decisions, like those of the Last Judgment, are unalterable, Richard FitzNeal, Dialogus de Scaccario, Lib.1, XVI). William commissioned the survey as a demonstration of power, asserting his rights and, at the same time, to get a better idea of his assets as well as the taxes he could raise to fund his various military campaigns. The major effort made to collect the requested data is also recorded by the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle:

Then, at the midwinter [1085], was the King in Gloucester with his council, and held his court there for five days [...]. After this the King had great thought and very deep conversation with his council about this land; how it was occupied, or with which men. Then he sent his men all over England into every shire and had them ascertain how many hundreds of hides there were in the shire, or what land and livestock the king himself had in the land, or what dues he ought to have in 12 months from the shire.

In the first half of 1086, commissioners were sent on circuit to collect the requested data by visiting every town, village, hamlet or manor to ask the same questions and record the answers. The list of 23 questions have survived and starts with "What is the estate called? Who owned it in the time of King Edward the Confessor [1066]? Who owns it now [1086]?" and continues with questions regarding people, their status (villans, freemen, cottars, slaves), livestock, ploughs and an assessment of the land (how many pastures, meadows, fishponds or mills?). The last questions concerned the changes and financial status of the estates: What were they worth [in the time of King Edward]? What were they worth now? How much did and does anyone have? And the most important question: is there to be had more than at present?

The collected information was compiled, processed and sorted during spring and summer and only seven months later, sometime before 1 August 1086, were the first drafts finished and brought together.

The sheer amount of the collected and processed data is impressive and gives a unique and fascinating insight into the social structure of England in the second half of the eleventh century and the changes brought about by the Norman Conquest. The Domesday Book is not the only source and "result" of the inquest commissioned by William I. Even more interesting under certain points of view, are the so-called Domesday-satellites, that is, the surviving preparing documents containing raw data for the inquest. While most of these "satellites" are preserved only in later copies, with the Liber Exoniensis or "Exon Domesday" has survived a precious original, which reveals some interesting details about the collecting and processing of information. The name "Liber Exoniensis" is a bit misleading, because it was not written as a "book", but is rather a collection of 103 libelli, later bound in a single volume. A team of different scribes worked on the collection, probably in the royal scriptorium at Winchester, recording information provided by the returns of the survey-commissioners. It is reasonably to suppose that there were thousands of similar documents for all territories included in the records known as "the king's book". Unfortunately, most of them have perished or been destroyed and it might be counted as a real stroke of luck, that the Exeter booklets containing entries for Somerset, Devon, Cornwall and partially of Dorset and Wiltshire as well have been deemed important enough to preserve. The libelli bear witness to the actual working of the collecting and recording activities which involved many people and took much effort, which is not that evident just looking at Great and Little Domesday, which were more uniformly worked and structured. In many respects, Exon Domesday appears as an unedited version of the respective entries in Great Domesday which cut out much information about tax records, people, livestock and land. Moreover, the documentation gives some insight into grievances and disputes related to the changes between 1066 and 1086 as well as to the treatment meted out to the English people by their Norman conquerors and overlords. By reviewing all the information, it becomes clear how an Anglo-Saxon ruling class was replaced by a group of "new arrivals" from the North of France, bound to the king in different ways and forming a new aristocracy. Still more impressive is the position held by the king himself, who possessed a huge amount of land (about a seventh of the kingdom) directly as his property. A quarter of the land was held by the Church and another quarter was enfeoffed to twelve tenants-in-chief, all of them closely connected to William. One of these was Odo, Bishop of Bayeux and half-brother of the King, and there are important female figures as well, like Queen Edith, the widow of Edward the Confessor, Queen Mathilda and Judith, a niece of William. By 1086, there were only few important Anglo-Saxon landholders left and out of approximately 1,400 tenants-in-chief recorded in Domesday, only two were Anglo-Saxons.

This strategy, enforced by swift and ruthless military campaigns and the placement of castles all over England, subdued any resistance put forth by the old Anglo-Saxon elite. When William died, he left a secured kingdom that was, without a doubt, the crown jewel of his possessions. Today, the Conquest of England is perceived as the most important and well-known Norman campaign in history. However, despite its uniqueness, there are certain aspects that are characteristic of Norman strategy in general and we find connections into the "Norman World" that go well beyond the English kingdom and the sphere of influence of William the Conqueror. While the desire to conquer and wield power was not that unusual at the time, the Normans were very apt and skilful in their way of gaining new territories. Their military dexterity and their adaptiveness helped them succeed where others failed. The Normans asserted themselves with a mix of violence, intimidation and cooperation, forging links with the pre-existing social structures and traditions. With this strategy, they were able to counterbalance their lack of numbers, which made it impossible to rule by sheer force over a longer stretch of time.

England at the time of its conquest was not only one of the wealthiest but also one of the best-organized kingdoms in all Christendom. It possessed a sophisticated administrative structure that could be accessed by the new ruler. William and his supporters did not change the system but recognised its advantages, which ultimately led to the commission of the Great Survey and the creation of the Domesday Book(s), which were so much more than a record, but also a demonstration and assertion of power. As the Anglo-Saxon-Chronicle puts it:

"So narrowly did he [William] have it done, that there was not even a single hide, not one yard of land, no not even – shameful as it is to tell, though not thought shameful to him to do it – not even one ox, not one cow, not one pig was left out, that was not set down in his record. (Peterborough manuscript)"

One chapter of the exhibition "The Normans. A Story of Mobility, Conquest and Innovation" will focus completely on the events that led to the Conquest of England by William the Conqueror and the strategies employed by him to secure his new dominion. In this context, the Great Survey, its realisation and its documentation are of the greatest importance. The Domesday Book and even more so the more detailed circuit-working papers, most of all the Liber Exoniensis – the only one surviving as an original –, bear witness to some of the most revolutionary events in English history, events that led to great changes in its society and altered the course of its destiny. It is therefore crucial to be able to illustrate these aspects by displaying at least one of the libelli of the Exon Domesday, despite knowing their extraordinary value and fragility (ideally those containing fol. 29r: Queen Mathildas lands in Dorset – in our exhibition we try to highlight some female figures beside the dominating male ones – and/or fol. 175r with its reference to Bishop Walkelin of Winchester and the hearing of Salisbury and/or fol. 95r which tells the story of the collected information recorded by different scribes relaying information about disputes and due payments). Without any doubt, it would be the highlight of the entire chapter, if not the entire exhibition. Moreover, it might help introduce our visitors to an aspect of Norman history which is without doubt very well-known in England, but much less in other parts of Europe.

INFORMATION FOR LENDERS

EXHIBITION

The international exhibition 'The Normans: A Story of Mobility, Conquest and Innovation' (Mannheim, from the 18th of September, 2022, to the 26th of February, 2023) is a project that pursues both cultural and academic objectives. There will be realized an exhibition catalogue whose contributions and articles will reflect the current state of research regarding the topics involved.

CONTRACTS, LOAN AGREEMENTS AND INSURANCE

To simplify the loan procedure and facilitate your work, we propose to provide loan contracts tailored specifically to the exhibition in question. Naturally, we are fully prepared to consider your requests and requirements for modification. Our insurance company, specialised in insuring and protecting works of art, is the renowned AXA ART Versicherung AG, Colonia-Allee 10-20, 51067 Cologne, Germany; contact: Dr. Jürgen Kronauer.

TRANSPORT AND MANAGEMENT OF THE EXHIBITS

For all transport operations will be engaged an international transport company with proven experience in the field of transporting and handling works of art. This team will be complemented by specialised conservators who will supervise and accompany the entire process of unpacking and packing as well as the handling of the exhibit-pieces at the exhibition site. The lender will provide the borrower with the exhibits at least fourteen days before the press conference. The dates of packing and unpacking are to be fixed by the borrower. The lender may send a courier to supervise the procedures. For the couriers from Germany, the borrower defrays the costs of the journey (plane tickets in Economy-Class; train tickets second class) and the accommodation for two nights in one of our contracted hotels. The daily allowance is determined by the German national law regarding travel expenses.

CONSERVATION AND RESTAURATION

The conservation of the objects will be ensured by our ten qualified and specialised conservators who can handle interventions on the exhibits when urgently needed. In that circumstance the decision on the 'right of intervention' – if stipulated in the contract – belongs to exclusively to the lender or their delegates.

CLIMATIC CONDITIONS

The optimal climatic conditions required for the conservation and the display of objects will be ensured according to the specifications given by the lender (through the technical equipment of the exhibition space or of the display cases) and the international standards for the treatment of the respective materials will be taken into consideration and respected. The data will be monitored and controlled via mechanical, chemical or if necessary electronical indicating devices.

The majority of the display cases used for the exhibitions are custom-built by specialised companies with a fixed structure of glass and steel and fitted with a light fixture in optical fibre without radiation of UV (cold light) and are dimmable. Furthermore, the cases are equipped with internationally recognised security-glass (VSG, laminated glass). The interior of the display cases is protected with security locks and equipped with a contaminant-free interior fitting. All the cases are furnished with Silica gel or Pro-Sorb and in addition can also be attached to a humidifying device. The maintenance of these appliances can be conducted without opening the case or interfering with the interior. The same applies to the maintenance of the light fixtures and the electronic measuring devices.

ILLUMINATION

The illumination will be adapted to the conservation requirements of the single exhibits. They will not be exposed to direct light (daylight). For particularly light-sensitive objects the special requirements and technical specifications given by the lender will be applied. In any case, the international guidelines regarding the sensitivity of different materials and their appropriate light levels will be respected.

SURVEILLANCE

The exhibition spaces will be secured around-the clock (24/7) by a fire alarm and an anti-theft alarm system (with a direct line to the fire brigade and the police) as well as protected by security personnel. During the opening hours there are employed additional security guards in the exhibition spaces. In all the rooms there is a strict ban on smoking; portable fire extinguishers and smoke detectors are provided.

PHOTOGRAPHIC RECORDINGS, SHOOTINGS AND PUBLICATION

For the preparation, publicity purposes and the publication of accompanying publications such as the exhibition catalogue we require high-quality images of all the exhibit-pieces. The borrower therefore asks the lender to supply suitable pictures (printable, coloured, against a neutral background) and to give permission to use them in connection with all print media concerning the exhibition and online communication. Moreover, the borrower asks the lender for the permission to use these images for publications in all forms of media (analogue and digital) in connection with the exhibition.

NOTE

Special requirements will be determined within the loan contract under 'supplementary/additional provisions'.

MANNHEIM²

- 2.3 The building is freestanding.
- 2.4 No renovation measures are planned for the duration of the exhibition.
- 2.5 We are not expecting any larger construction work within the next two years.
- 2.6 The building consists of a basement, ground floor and five more storeys.
The individual storeys are accessible via staircases and with one passenger and one goods lift.

Exhibition space

- 2.7 The special exhibition space is located on the first floor. It consists of an unbuilt three-naved columned hall.
- 2.8 Load-bearing capacity inside the special exhibition space: 500 kg/m²
- 2.9 For special exhibitions, no areas located in spaces with public activities are used, such as foyers, lounges, corridors, libraries, cafes, lecture rooms.
- 2.10 The special exhibition spaces are only used for the inspection.
- 2.11 Water connections or supply lines such as water lines, sanitary equipment, sprinkler plant, fire extinguishers, water taps etc located inside the special exhibition spaces:
Inside the special exhibition space, there are two hydrants with one fire extinguisher and one fire hose each.
- 2.12 Room partition system: Depending on the exhibition, the equipment used will include freestanding partition walls made of glass, chipboard or blockboard, partially with woodchip wallpaper glued on, and/or painted with water-based wall colour.
- 2.13 Eating or drinking will not be allowed inside the special exhibition area or in the temporary storage room for the exhibits, nor in the delivery area, nor in the preparation area for the special exhibitions.
- 2.14 We are carrying out routine examinations against problems with rodents, insects or microorganisms on a regular basis. The staff members of the natural science department of our house inspect the building at irregular intervals. Mechanical traps are used against rodents, while insects are for instance prevented by external gassing in times without special exhibitions.
- 2.15 We are not carrying out any extermination/gassing measures on a routine basis.

Transport and incoming deliveries

- 2.16 We have a ground-level entrance from the side of the square, door dimensions: height 2,90 m, width 2,70 m, and from the side of the court, door dimensions: height 2,70 m, width 2,50 cm, which means that we do not need any raised loading ramps or loading bridge. We have no crane and no forklift, but a lift truck for loads up to 1.000 kg.
Maximum box size fitting through our door for incoming deliveries: Height x width 2,85 m x 2,60 m
- 2.17 Times for acceptance of incoming goods: As a rule, incoming deliveries are accepted between 7 - 17 o'clock.
- 2.18 By arrangement, deliveries may also be accepted at other times.

MANNHEIM²

- 2.19 Inside our loading area, a truck with a length of up to 16 m (including trailer) or a corresponding number of vans can be parked for loading or unloading.
- 2.20 The (un-)loading area is located directly in front of the door for incoming deliveries, it is at ground level and located within a plain pedestrians area.
- 2.21 Security measures inside the loading area: Guarding staff will be present during loading and unloading.
- 2.22 Access to the incoming-deliveries area will be checked by guarding and supervising staff plus personal name badges with photographs.
- 2.23 Usually, unpacking/packing of the exhibits and their preparation for the exhibition is usually done inside the exhibition area.
- 2.24 We are not using any packing/preparation areas which would not be located inside our building.
- 2.25 Packing and unpacking is permanently monitored by a trained staff member of the house.
- 2.26 Items on loan are usually stored inside the exhibition area prior to their being installed.
- 2.27 We have a goods lift. Interior dimensions (length x width, ceiling height) 3,20 m x 2,80 m x 2,50 m, lift door: h. 2,50 m, w. 2,00 m; load-bearing capacity up to 5,000 kg.

Storage

- 2.28 We have a security storage room for items on loan. All items on loan will be stored in the special exhibition area, exhibits that are already unpacked are enclosed in showcases overnight. The area is locked, secured by alarms and air-conditioned. Apart from that, it is possible to store exhibits in the adjacent central museum depot on the basement floor. This area, too, is locked, secured by alarms and air-conditioned.

[Please refer to the detailed air-conditioning information in section III.]

The scientist responsible for the exhibition as well as the corresponding conservators have access rights, the head of the supervisory staff keeps the master key. Access is controlled by supervising staff and personalised name badges with photographs. The access paths to the special exhibition area are under video surveillance.

- 2.29 Our storage room is provided with a fire protection.

[Please refer to the detailed fire protection information in section IV.]

- 2.30 We have a highly secured storage area for valuable small-sized objects. This is a former multi-level bank safe made of steel, concrete and natural stone with a total area of 400 m².
- 2.31 Where possible, empty boxes are stored in one of our museum buildings.

III. ENVIRONMENT

HEATING AND AIR CONDITIONING

3.1 Type and position of our climate controlling system:

	In the entire building	Only in the special exhibition area	Only in storage rooms for special exhibitions
Centralised 24-hour climate control through heating and cooling ceilings, wall surface temperature control, supply and discharge of cooled and dehumidified air	✓ Year-round, with digital control
Centralised 24-hours air filtering installation	✓ 24 hours active

3.2 Heating system (e.g. electrical heating, compressed air, solar heating):

	Type	Manufacturer	Year of installation
In the special exhibition area	Centralised wall surface temperature control, heating and cooling ceilings, district heating, with digital control	Carrier, refrigeration systems Wolfferts	2006

3.3 Humidity control system:

The museum has a centralised humidity control system. Monitoring of the climatic values is done through building control technology with transmission to an on-call service manned 24 hours. Thermo-hygrographs are installed in addition.

3.4 Period of use of the climate control systems: year-round, 24 hours

3.5 The climate control systems are inspected multiple times per year.

3.6 Areas of variation of temperature and relative air humidity:

	Special exhibition areas		Storage rooms for special exhibitions
	Temperature °C	Relative humidity %	Temperature °C	Relative humidity %
Summer	18 - 23	55 (+/- 5)	-	-
Spring/Autumn/Winter	20 (+/- 2)	Adjustable from 35 - 55 (+/- 5)	-	-

3.7 In very hot summers, air humidity may vary by a maximum of 2.5 percent points over 24 hours. Maximum temperature in very hot summers may be up to max. 23 °C. In spring, autumn and winter, values are held constant by the controlling installation.

3.8 The changes of temperature and relative air humidity are recorded.

3.9 We are able to modify the level of both temperature and relative humidity so as to adapt to different objects. There is a possibility of either creating climate-controlled zones or of creating a uniform air humidity inside the showcases independently of temperature.

MANNHEIM²

3.10 The following devices are at our disposal:

- Thermo-hygrographs 10, more if needed.
- Hygrometers 20, more if needed.

These devices are gauged or conditioned once per year, or more frequently depending on the demand.

3.11 We check the level of temperature and that of the relative air humidity inside the special exhibition areas, the storage rooms for special exhibitions and the showcases containing sensitive exhibits on a daily basis by the central recording feature of the climate supervision and, should need be, with recording thermo-hygrographs, mechanical measuring dials and indicator paper.

The conservators and the technical staff acting in coordination with the competent conservators are responsible for the supervision of these values.

3.12 The special exhibition area is subject to separate control.

3.13 In individual cases and upon request, we are able to build showcases meeting specific climatic conditions.

3.14 The showcases are not equipped with dust filters, since they are dust-tight.

3.15 No objects will ever be placed above or in the vicinity of any heating, air-conditioning or air-humidifying/dehumidifying equipment.

3.16 There are no outer doors opening directly into the special exhibition area.

3.17 The outer windows have doubled security by a second alarm-secured interior window plus an interior window blind, so that no external windows would open directly into the special exhibition area.

Illumination

3.18 Type of illumination within the special exhibition area:

Daylight (windows)		Skylights		Artificial light
				Fluorescent tubes with UV filters	Lightbulbs with UV filters	Halogen spotlights with UV filters	Light distribution through glass fibre technology with UV filters	Working spotlights with UV filters
-	-	-	-	✓ Basic illumination	✓ Emergency illumination	✓	✓	✓

3.19 We have a light measuring device.

3.20 We can darken our rooms down to 2.5 Lux.

3.21 The display cases can also be illuminated from inside. Kind of interior illumination: fluorescent tubes, UV filters, halogen via glass-fibre technology.

3.22 The objects inside the showcases are protected from ultraviolet rays and heat accumulation caused by the interior illumination. Protection of the objects from ultraviolet rays is achieved by UV filters or the use of glass-fibre technology, and from heat accumulation by light boxes which are separated from the interior space of the display cases and equipped with upward ventilation slots.

IV. FIRE PROTECTION

- 4.1 Our building is resistant to fire and has been treated with fire retardants (Promatect).
The interior materials have a fire-retarding finishing, they have been rendered flame resistant through the use of flame inhibiting finishing.
- 4.2 The entire building is equipped with a fire and/or smoke detector/alarm system.
Manufacturer: Siemens AG.
- 4.3 The fire detector/alarm systems of our museum have been accepted by the „Verband deutscher Sachversicherer (VdS)“ (Association of German Property Insurers), and the detectors are installed and certified according to the VdS regulations.
- 4.4 All emergency exits are secured by alarm. The emergency exits are secured through the central alarm system.
- 4.5 Both the internal systems and the external connections of the alarm systems with the police and the fire brigade are checked every three months by the company of Siemens.
- 4.6 The fire and/or smoke detector/alarm systems are triggered by:

Inside the special exhibition premises:

Self triggered by smoke development

By ionic modifications in the room air

- 4.7 The fire alarm system will trigger a signal tone inside the house and cause an alarm at the local fire fighting forces through a dedicated line.
- 4.8 Fire restricting/suppressing systems in place:
 - cabinets with fire hoses according to the local fire regulations
 - portable fire extinguishers with dry chemicals
- 4.9 Our local fire regulations require the test of the portable fire extinguishers every two years.
- 4.10 The Fire Brigade provides a regular instruction to the staff.
- 4.11 Smoking is strictly forbidden in the entire building.
- 4.12 The museum is about 1000 m away from the local fire station as the crow flies.
- 4.13 The local fire station is manned 24 hours per day.
- 4.14 The fire fighting forces will take 5 minutes to reach us after a fire alarm.
- 4.15 There are two fire hydrants inside the special exhibition area.

V. SECURITY

- 5.1 The security of our museum is ensured without interruption. Our house is under electronic surveillance.
- 5.2 Guarding of our museum is performed by an external guarding company and own staff.
- 5.3 We have a qualified security agent for this house.

5.4 The guarding service is specifically instructed for the building and the existing exhibitions. The contents of this instruction consists in the inspection of the building, the individual tasks, the objects/situations requiring particular focus as well as the rules of conduct in case of theft, vandalism, fire etc. In addition, a particular security instruction is given for each new exhibition.

5.5 The guarding staff is equipped with radio devices.

5.6 The guarding the staff have to prove an impeccable police certificate of conduct.

5.7 Depending on the requirements, we are usually employing the following number of guarding staff:

	In the entire building		Within the special exhibition spaces
	Stationary	On patrol		On patrol
During the opening hours 11 – 18 o'clock	1	2		Depending on the needs, as required by the size of the exhibition
Outside the opening hours, while open for the employees and events	1	As required		-

5.8 All exhibition areas are subject to centralised supervision by cameras.

5.9 In the course of the erection and dismantling work, guarding staff or own staff will be present.

5.10 The exhibition areas being under camera supervision will be additionally monitored by patrolling guarding staff during the opening hours. Outside of the opening hours, camera systems, alarm systems and motion detectors are active.

5.11 During special exhibitions, visual object checks will be performed on a daily basis. The conservators are responsible for these checks.

5.12 We prepare a photographic documentation of the objects inside each special exhibition space.

5.13 We are keeping records of internal movements and for the retrieval of objects on loan.

5.14 During the opening hours, inspections will be carried out on a rotational principle so that no firm location of the supervising staff can be identified.

5.15 For reason of inadvertently caused damage to the exhibition items, any bulky, sharp-edged objects, in particular brief and camera cases, large video cameras, tripods, sticks, umbrellas of any size as well as knapsacks and bags have to be stored in the wardrobe area provided for this purpose. In cases of exception, bags up to the size of DIN A4, i.e. approximately 20x30 cm, may be admitted.

5.16 Position/title of the persons having the signatory right to permit the removal of museum objects out of the building:

Prof. Dr. Alfried Wieczorek, director-general

Dr. Christoph Lind, Director rem, arts and cultural history
